

Do you know parents who are in conflict?

You can help parents by:

Talking to them about their relationships.

Make sure they are aware that conflict can impact on their children and that there is help available. There is a toolkit and training to help you with these conversations at: www.hertfordshire.gov.uk/betterrelationships

Signposting them to self-help.

This Hertfordshire webpage has information for parents about relationships, and where to go for local and online help: www.hertfordshire.gov.uk/parentrelationships

Referring them to specialist support if they need it.

Any professional or volunteer working with a family in Hertfordshire can refer parents to the Parenting Together programme. This provides free evidence-based parental conflict support to parents, whether they are together or separated. To find out more, go to: www.parentingtogethersupportprogramme.org.uk
